

If you want to be financially secure in later life, it's never too early to begin preparing. The sooner you begin, the more choices, control, and peace of mind you will have.

There are many possible routes to achieve later life financial security.

Most people need help finding the best route and help navigating along the way. “Take the Road to Financial Security in Later Life” is a no charge Self-Study Course to help you learn about and navigate important mileposts along the road to achieving financial security in later life. You can move and learn at your own pace on this road trip—rest stops are allowed! All you need is a computer and about two hours of time.

We can help you make informed decisions NOW to protect your future financial security. We are the nationwide Cooperative Extension network providing trustworthy, un-biased information—without selling financial products.

This course is especially designed for baby boomers looking toward later life, planning for changes in work and/or retirement, and/or dealing with financial issues of aging parents. It can help you:

- Recognize the financial realities of living a third of your life after age 60;
- Understand the myths and realities about later life events and financial security;
- Recognize common factors that increase an individual's risk of facing later life financial insecurity;
- Understand what later life events are normal and should be expected;
- Identify specific action steps that can help protect one's later life financial security;
- Assess your personal progress in planning, acting, and evaluating; and
- Discover research-based resources and tools to help you make more informed decisions.

Achieving financial security in later life rarely happens without planning, taking action, and evaluating.
